

PARK FEATURES

Atlai Rock: Outstanding examples of ancient Indian rock art or petroglyphs, including a depiction of the atlai (at'-lai-i), a notched stick used to throw primitive spears. The atlai was a predecessor to the bow and arrow. The adjacent Atlai Rock Campground provides 43 campsites. Some are semi-primitive and others are RV sites with water and power hookups. This campground provides showers and modern restrooms.

Arch Rock: Near Atlai Rock Campground is the more primitive Arch Rock Campground with its more secluded campsites. A two-mile scenic loop road provides views of some of the Valley's most interesting rock formations, such as Arch Rock and Piano Rock.

Beehives: Unusual sandstone formations weathered by the eroding forces of wind and water. Nearby are three group camping areas, available by reservation only.

Cabins: Now a picnic area, these historic stone cabins were built with native sandstone by the CCC (Civilian Conservation Corps) in the 1930's as a shelter for passing travelers.

Clark Memorial: Historic monument honors an early traveler.

East Entrance Station: Mounted maps, information, restrooms, and points of interest. Elephant Rock is accessible a short distance along the Arrowhead Trail.

Fire Canyon/Silica Dome: From this vantage point there is an excellent view of the deep red sandstone of Fire Canyon, and the unique geological features of Silica Dome.

Mouse's Tank: Named for a renegade who used the area as a hideout in the 1890's. Mouse's Tank is a natural basin in the rock where water collects after rainfalls, sometimes remaining for months. A half-mile round-trip trail leads to Mouse's Tank from the trailhead parking area, passing numerous examples of prehistoric petroglyphs.

Petrified Logs: Logs and stumps washed into the area from an ancient forest about 225 million years ago are exposed in two locations.

Seven Sisters: Fascinating red rock formations are easily accessible from the road. Picnic areas provide a relaxing stop during your Valley tour.

Visitor Center: Information, books, souvenirs, and exhibits on the Valley and surrounding areas.

West Entrance Station: Maps, points of interest, restrooms, and information.

White Domes: Sandstone formations with brilliant contrasting colors, picnic area, and a one mile scenic trail. White Domes is 5.5 miles (8.8 km) drive from the Visitor-Center.
